WORKING AS A NURSING ASSISTANT IN AMERICA!

A certified nursing assistant, or CNA, helps patients with activities of daily living and direct healthcare needs under the supervision of a Registered Nurse (RN) or Licensed Practical Nurse (LPN). CNAs are also commonly referred to as a Nursing Assistant, a Nurse's Aid, or a Patient Care Assistant (PCA). CNAs play an important role in any healthcare setting, which includes responsibilities such as gathering medical supplies, answering patient calls, bathing and grooming patients, preparing rooms for admissions, documentation of information and obtaining vital signs per protocol, etc. While learning more about the healthcare world and gaining clinical knowledge, many CNAs continue to the next step in their healthcare career by pursuing LPN or RN licensure, or BSN Nursing degree.

Common healthcare setting for CNAs include nursing homes, adult care facilities, long-term residential facilities, rehabilitation centers, and hospitals .

BECOME A LICENSED PRACTICAL NURSE IN THE USA

A Licensed Practical Nurse, or LPN, provides patients with quality care and comfort measures under the supervision of Registered Nurse (RN) and other medical professionals. LPNs performs essential patient care tasks including monitoring and recording vital signs, updating patient charts, offering bedside care, assisting in nursing care, bathing and providing meals, cleaning and managing medical equipment and instruments, organizing medication of patients, starting intravenous (IV) fluids, etc. LPN position is great a stepping-stone to furthering education with more advanced nursing degrees and developing career in healthcare field. LPNs can also earn patient counseling certification, IV certification, advanced life support certification, or applying for LPN to BSN program.

Common workplaces for LPNs are nursing homes, adult care facilities, residential care facilities, in-home healthcare, doctor's office, and schools.
